GEO-stories of our places and people: Oledo

The wide Oledo valley extends from Quinta da Várzea to Cachouca. It is a clear fault-related valley, with asymmetric sheds, where the granitic rocks are seen to Torrinha, controlled by an orthogonal fault to the major Ponsul Fault. In its flat bottom stretches the Ribeira da Caniça, languid to its arrival at Ribeira de Alpreade. The entrance to this Valley, and consequently, in the Municipality of Idanha-a-Nova, occurs through a natural portal, consisting of two columns of granodiorite divided into small angular blocks, conical shaped, ending almost 70m above the plane. These natural castles, igneous rocks created in the depths of the Earth's crust about 490 milion years ago, darken of biotite and stories of tungsten, were temporary refuge to some of the early inhabitants of Oledo Valley, in the late Bronze Age. In the bottom of Cabeço de S. Gens, hidden in the vegetation which seeks to choke the river, arises a small bridge of one arch, very old. As old as the ancient ceramic traces found in Barros, traces of what may have been a large Roman Villa that the place name is not unrelated, fallen into oblivion. In the shadow of Barrocal da Figueira, rising slowly to 415 m, the highest point in the parish, with a total area of 27,67km2, lays in the wider plan, along road 353, the village of Oledo. The old centre of this Order of Christ's land, later majorat, has a 17th Century origin, in the union of paths leading to numerous agricultural small villages marking Oledo's landscape. With its 355 inhabitants, is still nowadays a village marked by what is harvested in the vast fields. The heritage are the marks of agricultural regional planning work, sometimes crowned here and there with a fountain cut in granitoids. Here is possible to stay in local high quality accommodations and eat well in the restaurants. The territory and its vast network of ancient paths can be developed to MTB and walking trails allowing the visitors to enjoy this granitic landscape, with bush lands and oaks. At Christmas, Oledo Christmas Village dresses up in a confluence of tradition and requirement, in a celebration that attracts people from all over the municipality.
